Numb. 5215

SATURDAY, JUNE 23, 1744.

Naples, June 2.

IT is certain, that the Miniſtry here are a good deal embaraſs'd by the preſent Situation of Affairs. There is a very artful Manifeſto handed about here, in the Name of the Queen of Hungary, promiſing vaſt Advantages to the People, in Caſe of a Revolution. The Duke de Montalegre had very early Notice of its being diſtributed, and acted like a wiſe Miniſter. He cauſed the Prince of Caraffa, whoſe Houſe they were found, to be ſent to Priſon; when his Highneſs told him, That, perhaps, the Queen of Hungary might have it in her Power to revenge the ill Uſage of her Friend ſpeedily; the Duke anſwered, Sir, I do not conſider you as the Diſperſer, but as the Author of this Manifeſto. The Queen of Hungary has an Army in the Field, under an experienced General, who, if any Credit were due to this Manifeſto, would undoubtedly have publiſhed it; and therefore I am perſuaded it is an Artifice of the Diſcontented, to ſeduce his Majeſty's Subjects, in the Queen of Hungary's Name, and yet leave her at Liberty to diſavow this Paper, and refuſe theſe Terms, if a Revolution ſhould be brought about. We continue to ſend, every Day, large Quantities of Money, Proviſions, and Ammunition, to the Army; where his Majeſty ſtill continues in good Health. This Morning we iſſued Orders to all the Cities on the Coaſt, to embark whatever Proviſion they could get together, in order to ſend it hither; and publick Prayers are ſtill continued, by Order of our Archbiſhop, for the Succeſs of his Majeſty's Arms, and the Deliverance of the Country from Bloodſhed and Sedition.

Extract of a Private Letter from Rome, June 6, 1744.

'His Neapolitan Majeſty, who advanced with his Army as far as Nagni and Rocca Priora, having Intelligence, that the Auſtrians were moving towards him, thought fit to turn off to the little Town of Velletri; which ſtands on a Hill, the Summit of which is cover'd by the famous Wood of Faiola, and the Bottom with Vineyards. Prince Lobkowitz was no ſooner informed of this unexpected Motion of the Spaniards, than he form'd a Reſolution of ſhutting them up there; which he executed upon the Spot ſo happily, that they are cruelly confined within the Walls of the Town, and the Vineyards which are contiguous to them. As the Poſt is naturally very ſtrong, and as M. de Gages knows how to make the moſt of an advantageous Situation, the German General has not thought fit to attack the Spaniards, but contents himſelf with blocking them up; and with this View it is, that he has taken Poſt in the Wood of Faiola, at Civita Lavinia, at Genzano, and at Nemi. By this Diſpoſition, the Town is entirely block'd up, except towards the Sea and the Coaſt, with which the Spaniards have ſtill ſome Communication; but the Huſſars, Croats, Warradins, Lyſonians, and other barbarous Nations, under the Command of Prince Lobkowitz, give them inexpreſſible Diſturbance. The Famine is already increas'd to a great Degree in Velletri; and as Prince Lobkowitz has cauſ'd the Aqueduct which furniſhes the Place with moſt of its Water, to be turn'd another Way, we doubt not but M. de Gages, who has engag'd his Neapolitan Majeſty and the Duke of Modena in this falſe Step, will ſuddenly take ſome Reſolution worthy of himſelf, to deliver them out of this Streight. What that Meaſure will be, we cannot ſay; but, in all Probability, he will not think of Fighting, ſince Prince Lobkowitz has already offered him Battle twice, without Succeſs; and as Things now ſtand, it is not likely he will offer it a third Time. The Magazines and Head Quarters of the Auſtrians are fixed at Nemi; they draw their Proviſions from Rome, and bake their Bread at Albano, and at Genzano. Prince Lobkowitz has, laſt Week, received a Reinforcement of between four and 5000 Men, Croats and Licamans. This very Day 350 Horſes, for remounting Prince Eugene's Regiment of Dragoons, entered his Camp. The Auſtrians are now 40,000 ſtrong; whereas the Spaniards and Neapolitans are not above 30,000. This is a juſt and candid Account of the Matter, and a fair Repreſentation of the State that both Armies are in. It is thought, that Prince Lobkowitz waits the Arrival of ſome Engliſh Ships on the Coaſt; which, if it ſhould happen before M. de Gages finds a Way to make a Retreat, the Whole of their Troops may be obliged to ſurrender Priſoners of War. This very Morning Prince Lobkowitz ſigned, and publiſhed, the Manifeſto which has been for ſome Time ſecretly handed about in the Kingdom of Naples; by which her Hungarian Majeſty promiſes her Royal Protection, to all ſuch of the Inhabitants of the ſeveral Provinces of that Country, as ſhall immediately return to their Duty, and declare for the Houſe of Auſtria. We have this Moment Advice, that a Body of Spaniſh Miquelets having attack'd a Party of Auſtrian Huſſars, that were poſted at the ruined Aquæduct, the latter repulſ'd them, and kill'd 200 on the Spot.'

Hague, June 24. The States of this Province will aſſemble to Day. We learn, by our laſt Letters from London, that his Britannick Majeſty is reſolved to ſend 6 or 8000 of his own Troops to Flanders; and that the 6000 Dutch which are at preſent in his Dominions, will ſpeedily be tranſported thither. And as his Britannick Majeſty has lately written a Letter with his own Hand to the Queen of Hungary, recommending to her, in the ſtrongeſt Terms poſſible, the ſending a conſiderable Corps of Troops into Flanders, it is not doubted, that the Army of the Allies will be very ſpeedily in a Condition to act offenſively againſt the French, notwithſtanding they boaſt of being 90,000 ſtrong.
